SUPERIOR COURT ADJOURNED WED.

Moxcey Manslaughter Charge Filled—15 Divorces Granted

The $10,000 personal injuries suit of Clara and Nathan Waite of Canton vs. Dwight Bisbee of Canton was continued Thursday. This was to recover damages for the injuries of Mr. and Mrs. Waite's daughter Clara, who was struck by Bisbee's car on the 16th of last July. Various physicians testified that the child sustained cuts and abrasions on the face, legs and arms, and bruises on the hips and back. An X-ray picture showed a fractured pelvis, but later pictures showed it nearly healed. Some of the doctors stated that the scars would be permanent while another thought there would be few traces by the time the girl is 13 years old. Mr. Bisbee testified that three children were on one side of the road and one on the other. The one child started to cross, but the other called her attention to the approaching car. She hesitated and he was unable to avoid hitting her. An officer stated that measurements showed that brakes were applied 18 feet before the child was reached and the car went 48 feet before striking a fence. The girl was thrown 15 feet.

The hearing of two cases of John Bredeau and Henrietta Bredeau of Rumford against Arthur Walker of Rowe's Corner was begun Friday. It appears that the Bredeaus' car collided with a loaded log truck driven by Walker on the South River road, Auburn, Dec. 1. Conflicting testimony was given as to the position of the cars, each driver claiming to be on his own side of the road, but Auburn police testified that tracks showed that the right wheels of Walker's truck were off the tar on the right side. According to testimony given by Mr. and Mrs. Bredeau were taken to St. Marie's Hospital in Lewiston, where Mr. Bredeau was unconscious 17 days. He remained there 24 days and Mrs. Bredeau was there a week. Both are still unable to work. Mr. Bredeau has frequent dizzy spells; he is irritable and his memory is poor. Mrs. Bredeau is unable to walk alone and suffers constant pain about the back, legs and hips. The jury was out seven hours and 50 minutes, returning a $1,900 verdict Tuesday night for Mrs. Bredeau, and Mr. Bredeau losing his case to Mr. Walker.

Sentences

William Juskevitch pleaded guilty to the charge of adultery and was sentenced to serve five months in jail, the sentence to be figured from Nov. 30.

Thomas S. Hall was allowed to retract his plea of guilty of arson. He then pleaded not guilty and was sent to the State hospital for examination.

Omar A. Moxcey was sentenced to serve three months in jail on a drunken driving charge, and the charge of manslaughter was filed.

To honor the members of the Gould Academy Boys Basketball Team, the Lions Club observed guest night with a special program on Tuesday of this week. Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Pendexter of Norway and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wheeler of South Paris were out of town guests. Members of the Academy faculty and prominent townspeople with the club personnel and ladies made a happy party of about seventy.

A. Van Den Kerckhoven, president, presided and introduced the post-prandial speakers. Rev. L. A. Edwards extended a brief greeting. Dr. F. E. Hanscom expressed his pride and confidence in the basketball players and their trainers. Mr. Anderson, senior coach, responded with humor and sincerity. Paul Braune spoke for the boys and expressed tribute and appreciation to the teachers and supporters. Mr. Pendexter gave an interesting talk on old-fashioned schools and scholars. His humor was subtle and much enjoyed.

COUNTY DEMOCRATS WANT THURSTON IN U. S. SENATE

A meeting of the Oxford County Democratic Committee was held at Norway Monday evening and resolutions were adopted urging Paul Thurston of Bethel to be a candidate for the United States Senate. The committee pledged their enthusiastic support. Mr. Thurston said that personally he preferred to remain a "private in the ranks," but if it developed later that the party needed his services, he could not refuse.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Many people have expressed a wish to inspect the new academy building before it is occupied, assuming, I suppose, that they would not have an opportunity to do this after the school moves in.

The contractors have found it necessary to keep the building closed to visitors for some time, as floors were being finished, and painting going on in all parts of the building.

As soon as school reopens for the spring term in the building, the Manual Training Department will give an exhibition of the years' work in the new Manual Training Rooms. All who are interested will be invited to attend this exhibition, and at the same time visit all parts of the new building.

The date of Visitors' Day will be announced later, when a cordial invitation will be extended to all.

SPECIAL TRAIN CANCELLED

The special train which was announced by radio last Sunday to run from Berlin to Portland next Sunday morning has been cancelled, according to A. Verville, the local station agent. He says that the railroad officials were unable to get assurance of enough passengers to make the trip feasible. The train was to have reached Portland in time for its passengers to attend the meeting of the 13 Class at the Strand Theatre and return in the afternoon.

Sunday, March 18—The day seems moderately warm but the sky is overcast and signs of rain are apparent.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Silver, son Derwood and little daughters, Janette and Phyllis, moved into their new home Friday, March 16, one of the coziest and best planned in town. The house was planned by Mrs. Silver personally and her plans carried out by the builder, Clarence J. Perham of Bryant Pond.

BETHEL NEEDS

More and Better Sidewalks—winter
and summer,
Rural Fire Protection,
Night Watchman—All the Year,
Enforced Traffic Rules,
Australian Ballot System for Town
Meetings.

MORE AND BETTER

With the approach of another spring we shall soon forget the lack of sidewalks through the winter months. In fact many of us have grown to take for granted the blocked paths and the recurring walking in the streets. Because another winter has passed without injury to the foot travelers is no indication that this method of travel is not unnecessarily hazardous, for with the icy surface and blinding headlights the pedestrian after nightfall certainly has been working under difficulties.
And there is no great enjoyment
in piloting a car under these conditions.

Bethel's sidewalks are none too numerous in the summer. Their number and condition at any season have long been noted by the strangers "in our midst." Several years have passed since a foot of new sidewalk has been built, and it seems time to think of some means of providing suitable walks throughout the year, at least on the principal streets. We believe that a regular construction program carried over a period of years and some provision for suitable efficient equipment in snow removal need not require an expenditure which voters at town meeting would consider large, and the money spent would be a pleasing investment for a large number of our citizens.

THE GOLDEN EGGS

"The taxpayer, let it never be forgotten, is the malnourished of government," says the Detroit Times.
"He is, as a rule, the man of steady industry and frugality, who labors
early and late—producing, saving, paying and supporting....
"He is society's prop and reliance. Without him... recovery is an idle dream and the great projects of government are foredoomed
to failure."

This essential figure, the taxpayer, has few vocal defenders.
Public officials pile steadily increasing burdens on him. They take a large part of his income and often his savings—both through taxation and through tax-exempt governmental projects which compete with his private endeavors.

You don't have to pay direct taxes to be a taxpayer. You may never pay an income tax or a property tax—but a substantial percentage of your earnings is taken for taxes nevertheless. The grocer who sells you food, the factory that produces it and the railroad which transports it, are heavily taxed—and the tax they pay is added to the cost of everything
you buy.

Every one of us is a taxpayer.
Every one of us is proud to support our government. But each one of us is less secure in his job
and his savings, as oppressive tax and legislative policies discourage industries and investments which provide steady jobs.

The taxpayer is the goose that lays the golden eggs. Will the public servants he employs kill him in an endeavor to collect more eggs than he can produce?

GORHAM NORMAL SCHOOL

The Y. W. Cabinet of the Gorham Normal School held a discussion meeting recently on the subject of increasing the enrollment for the coming year. Several good reasons why this should be done were given, among them being the fact that a Normal School education was an asset to any individual even if he does not intend to make teaching his life work. Another fact of interest brought out was that the school could accommodate a large student body, being amply provided in the way of equipment and teachers. We are especially fortunate in having as our principal, one of the foremost of the Eastern educators, Dr. Walter Earle Russell. Due to some of the conclusions drawn up at the Cleveland Convention, Dr. Russell believes that the opportunity for securing positions will be greatly increased in the next year or so.

Friday morning the Library Club
of the school presented a chapel program in keeping with St. Patrick's day, which was observed on Saturday. Miss Doris Hunt of Norway spoke on the program. Her subject was "Irish Folk Lore," in which she discussed many interesting topics.

The girls' inter-class basket-ball games have been played off this week. In the first game the Juniors defeated the Seniors by a narrow margin and in the second game
the Advanced Seniors were defeated by the Juniors by a score of 32-6. This, of course, makes the Juniors the winning team, although another game will be played between the Seniors and Advanced Seniors. Evelyn Moulton of Hiram is the captain of the Junior team.
Others who played on the team
from Oxford County were Doris Hunt of Norway and Margaret Dalzell of Bethel. Miss Christine Davis of South Paris plays on the Senior team.

The Oxford County Club gave a
St. Patrick's Day Dance in Center
Saturday evening. The admission was 20 cents, but it was certainly worth it. The music was furnished by the Fraternity orchestra. The hall was very well decorated in green and white by the committee who consisted of Doris Hunt of Norway and Mary Colby of South Paris. Refreshments were in keeping with the holiday by Irene Tubbs of Norway and Evelyn Moulton of Hiram.

WITH THE POETS

To Our Readers—If there is an old song or poem which you cannot find and would like to see in print, write the Citizen. If we are unable to locate it possibly another reader can furnish it for publication.

IT COULDN'T BE DONE—SO HE DID IT

Somebody said that it couldn't be done, But he, with a chuckle, replied That "Maybe it couldn't" but he would be one Who wouldn't say so till he tried. So he buckled right in, with a trace of a grin. On his face. If he worried he hid it. He started to sing as he tackled the thing That couldn't be done—and he did it.

Sombody scoffed: "Oh, you'll never do that; At least no one ever has done it." But he took off his coat and he took off his hat, And the first thing we knew he'd begun it; With the lift of his chin, and a bit of a grin, Without any doubting or quiddit. He started to sing as he tackled the thing That couldn't be done—and he did it.

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done; There are thousands to prophesy failure; There are thousands to point out to you, one by one, The dangers that wait to assail you. But just buckle in with a bit of a grin, Then take off your coat and go to it; Just start in to sing as you tackle the thing That "cannot be done"—and you'll do it. —Anon.

"NOT AS MOTHER WAS"

"They're not as mother was—our girls;" That's what the croaks are saying. They say it's nothin' now but curls An' parties an' card playin'. They say all of the clan will shirk Jobs that bring any bother; At house chores none of them will work; "They're not at all like mother." Half of the time they're on the lug, Or at some place a-dancin'. The Turkey Trot or Bunny Hug, Or at some dude a-glancin'. Their money's spent in movie shows, Or some such place or other. Except the little mite that goes For bed and board to mother.

Hats, dress and lingerie and shoes Make up their bill of pleasure; These are the charges some folks choose To enter up full measure Against the average girl, and rage —It's tiresome, this bother— She's just the same at the same age As was her honored mother.

The Solomons

The Solomons, which are situated about 900 miles northeast of Australia, are among the most remote of Pacific Islands, yet, save for the Ladrone, and perhaps the Marshall, they were the earliest found by Europeans. They were discovered, strangely, from Peru, where adventurers, thirsting for more gold, heard rumors of a continent close by to the west. Lost for 200 years, they were rediscovered in 1767.

Theater Seat Space Regulated

District of Columbia regulations require that all theaters or public buildings with fixed seats must allow a space not less than 2 feet 6 inches from back to back of chairs, with an aisle width of not less than 4 feet—this width to be increased with the increased size of the hall. Where there are no fixed seats, 8 square feet per person must be allotted.

Electricity Gone Astray

Spoils Water in Pipes

Stray electricity from the house wiring system or some other source has been found to discolor and to change the taste of water delivered to the consumer, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Frequently, such a condition will prevail in the house piping, yet be absent in the water in the street main.

An investigation by a water company tends to show that alternating current may change the quality of water. It has been established that direct current disintegrates water mains.

The wayward current arises from "promiscuous grounding." The primary function of the ground wire is safety. It is an avenue of escape for current diverted from its normal course by a leak or a defect in insulation. The simplest ground is the water pipe.

When the current, instead of dissipating itself harmlessly in the earth, continues its activity, the water and the pipe containing it are damaged. The stray current sometimes makes water blue, green or red and frequently creates disagreeable odors and metallic tastes suggestive of tin, lead or rust.

CHAPTER XII

DOCTOR WHITE shot him a swift glance. He ascribed this apparent faintness to an overpowering disappointment. He was convinced that the count had firmly expected the presence of vast treasure in those guns. Jewels, diamonds and rubies from some bishop's mitre, or pearls, from Rio de la Hach. Somebody aboard the corvette had guessed the secret, perhaps, and found time to get below and draw the priceless charges before the hold had filled.

The count drew another deep breath and appeared to get himself in hand. But Doctor White was disturbed by the pallor of his face. Also its expression puzzled him, because it was not that of a man who has suffered crushing disappointment, but of one who struggles to suppress some violently active emotion rather than the passive crushing one of profound chagrin.

The discerning doctor was more than ever certain that count de Corlay had good reason to count on a secret hoard contained in these guns, and that even though they had proven to be empty of such, this might yet be found in others. But having now seen that Doctor White suspected something of this sort, the count was torn between eager expectation of treasure still secreted in such a fashion and despair at knowing that he might as well abandon all hope of its possession.

Doctor White glanced at Robert. That young man's face wore a mask-like indifference. He did not seem to be concerned at all about their comparatively worthless find, but what struck the doctor as even more singular in so evidently devoted a son, he did not appear to observe the obvious distress of his father.

Then, catching the doctor's eye Robert said lightly, "Well, it rather looks as if papa and I had been had."

"Had by whom?" Doctor White demanded.

"By our jolly old revered ancestor. I don't mind telling you now that he recorded a tidy bit of personal plunder in the diary we found. But some artful Johnny must have piped it down and scooped it in the shuffle."

"We might find it yet," said Tom. "I'm going down to have a look-see myself when Mike gets through. He may have missed something."

Doctor White nodded. "Of course I don't know what was recorded in the diary, but it seems to me too early in the game to give up hope. I think, also, that it would be very much better if you were to tell us just what was in the diary."

Robert smiled. "What's the good of that, sir, when you have shown us very clearly that we have actually no legal claim at all? I don't mind telling you frankly that it would only be a slap at our ancestor and the family name. Your suspicions that he might have collared something to the whole of which he was not entitled, were entirely correct."

"Robert," said the count sharply, "you say too much."

"What's the odds, papa? The jig's up. The diver has overhauled the cabin and drawn a blank. I would jump at the chance of selling out our share—if the doctor considers we're entitled to any—for what we've taken off her already. These little guns don't look like much, but the plate would be rather nice to have."

"We have already decided among ourselves that you were to have the plate," said Doctor White, "and you are quite welcome to the guns, too, for that matter. But we don't insist on your abandoning all further share."

The count and Robert exchanged a swift, startled look. Then Robert asked, slowly, "Just what is your estimate of our proper share, Doctor White?"

"Gentlemen," said Doctor White, "my ward, Miss Poole, and I decided before starting our salvage operations that the value of whatever we might secure should in all fairness be divided in three equal shares, one third to the De Corlays, who sped our efforts, and because Robert helped drive off Sebastian, one-third to Tom Jordan for similar reasons, and one-third to Miss Poole and myself, because we were the first to establish an actual claim by getting a line to the wreck. Miss Poole and I would not have beaten Sebastian but for what you gentlemen told us. We were actually trying to beat you. We could not then have held our claim if it had not been for Tom and Robert, particularly Tom. And if it had not been for us, principally Miss Poole, Sebastian would certainly have got his line fast to the Fourquet before Tom and Robert arrived on the scene. I think that you must all admit the justice of these statements, and their truth."

The count nodded. A tinge of color had come back to his lean cheeks and there was a deep glow in his eyes. "Ma foi, monsieur, but you are as sound in your argument as you are magnanimous. Then you really intend to grant us a third, no matter what may yet be found?"

"We do, sir," Doctor White answered, "no matter if we find the treasure of the Inca—or a cannon stuffed with pearls to the very muzzle of her."

Robert burst into a ringing laugh, and looked at the count. "I think we've jolly well got to play the game after that, papa."

"I am much of your mind, Robert. I failed to realize that we had to deal with people of such a distinguished fairness." He raised his hat. "I beg to apologize."

Doctor White looked in some bewilderment from one to the other. He failed utterly to grasp the situation. Tom and Jessica were no less puzzled.

The count, suddenly animated, threw out his hands. "You have just offered to give us the plate and these three guns," he cried, shifting to more fluent French. "The gift of plate we accept with gratitude, not only because of its historic family interest, but as a souvenir of the fairest and most honorable dealing that it has ever been my good fortune to encounter. But since you have so disinterestedly stated your just intention toward us, we no longer desire more than our third share of the value of these guns."

The three Americans stared at count de Corlay in astonishment. Then Tom choked back a laugh. Doctor White glanced at him and frowned. "But, my dear count," he said, "there is nothing in these guns. You just saw me sound them."

Robert chuckled. "My aunt, Doctor, but you're a hard man to crowd treasure on."

"What d'ye mean, treasure?" Tom demanded. "What are three brass cannons worth?"

Robert continued his chuckling. "Tell them, papa."

The count's face was fairly scintillating. Then, with some effort he checked his overpowering excitement and smiled. "Are you quite sure that they are brass?"

Tom, suddenly pale, leaned down and searched the guns. He found brass. He had almost reached the muzzle of the first cannon when he saw the face of

"Somebody—your ancestor or some other joker must have been kidding, Count. They're brass. With more copper, perhaps, than the brass we make today, but brass. Did you think they might be gold?"

"Sapristi!" roared the count, "but they are gold, young man. They are solid gold. They are the guns of the Holy Trinity!"

Doctor White was conscious of a sudden lifting of the diaphragm. The situation, with its puzzling complications, became clear to him almost in an instant. With a comprehensive glance at the count he repeated the words, "The Holy Trinity?"

"Precisely, sir. They were cast of melted votive offerings in the church of the Santa Trinidad, the Holy Trinity, and other contributions in gold for the defense of "What d'ye mean, treasure?" Tom Demanded.

Ciudad Trinidad up in the mountains of Peru. This early Spanish mission was presided over by one Father Pietro, of the Brotherhood of Jesus, who like most of his cult was a man of distinguished learning and abilities. Informed that rates were coming to attack the place he summoned his people to fetch in their gold, and from that he cast these guns. He had been taught the process of tempering gold by an old Inca chief who was devoted to him, and it is probable that he made his powder from the mineral and sulphur and saltpeter that was obtainable in that region."

The count paused for breath. "Tom managed to mutter, 'By gorry, I might have guessed it from the weight of them.'"

"That brave effort failed," count de Corlay resumed, still speaking French. "The mission was destroyed, put to fire and sword, and these pirates must have discovered the secret of the guns. Thereafter they passed from hand to hand, eventually to be captured by my ancestor, who took them from a buccaneer ship, Porisima Concepcion, which he destroyed. They were then covered, as now, by this coating of gum, and the character of their metal was unsuspected. My ancestor was set to thinking in the manner that Mr. Jordan has just mentioned. By their astonishing weight, he knew something of metallurgy and found occasion to make some tests, when he discovered that aqua regia alone was able to erode their surface. Even that reacted more slowly than upon virgin gold."

Historically, as Doctor White recalled, the count's story was credible. In actual fact, as far as history may be trusted, the authorities of Porto Bello, when that stronghold of Spain in the New World was besieged by Morgan's merciless buccaneers, resorted to precisely the same subterfuge. The gold in the city, by all accounts a vast store, awaiting shipment to Spain, and all that could be hastily gathered from the citizens, was melted and some small cannon (the number is not recorded) cast and mounted with their more practical if less intrinsically valuable brothers, on the city's walls. Dismantled from their carriages before the final victorious assault of Morgan's men they naturally were completely overlooked by the buccaneers, intent only on pillage, but there is no historic record of the really "wonderful" having been satisfied.

That the secret should have remained undivulged, in view of the savage tortures inflicted on the unfortunate citizens of Porto Bello who were suspected of having concealed their treasures, is one of the marvels in the tragic history of the Spanish Main. Possibly few, except a handful of the higher authorities, knew of the trick, and these in all probability were slain in the first hours of slaughter that followed the capture of the city by the buccaneers and before the systematic pillage was begun. The incident, however, was vivid in Doctor White's memory as the count de Corlay ended his explanation.

Tom, staring at the three pieces of ordnance that had been so carelessly dumped down upon the beach, gave a long, low whistle. Then, with Yankee practicality he said, "They'll react to a hacksaw, I reckon," and looked at Jessica.

But Doctor White was not thinking of that consideration. His mind was at work on the idea of argumentum ad hominem, and how easily he might have fallen victim to such had not the honor of these Frenchmen spurred it on discovering that they had in turn to deal with a just man whose fairness they were content to abide by and whose mere word was enough to make them feel safe in their astonishing revelation.

The doctor's eyes glistened as he contemplated the honor done him. He felt incapable of speech. His throat swelled. Some acknowledgment being in order he merely bowed, first to the count and then to Robert. His salute was gravely returned by each. No more was necessary. The two Frenchmen understood.

CHAPTER XIII

"ABOUT seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as I figure it," said Tom, in notes of awe to Jessica. "Split three ways."

"Of which one whole third goes to you," said Jessica.

"So I'm told, and for what I'd gladly have paid a premium for the privilege of doing. That seems to be the way of this world. Here I've worked like a dog at something or other for twenty years—since I was ten—for scarcely any pay at all, and now all of a heap I'm handed a fortune for nothing, at all."

Count de Corlay and Doctor White and Robert came out from the doctor's little laboratory, where they had been subjecting some filings of the gum to analytic tests. Both were skilled chemists, the count at the head of a recently established fixed nitrogen laboratory.

"What's the assay, papa?" Robert asked.

"Only about 98 per cent pure, mon petit," the count answered dryly. "It is as I predicted. The hardening process was entirely one of temperatures, and not of alloy. There is no copper, no sulphur, nothing but gold. I should say."

"Will this tempering affect its value?" Tom asked.

"Why yes. It ought to increase it very considerably. About the only fault to be found with gold is its softness."

"And its weight," said Tom, without much thought.

"I say, Tom, did you ever hear any Johnny grousing about the burden of his gold?"

"I'll bet your honored ancestor did when it went down under him," Tom retorted.

"Right, old bean. But we sha'n't have to complain over excess weight when our respective ministers of finance get through with us," Robert stated.

This dark prophecy already had furnished Tom a bitter cud to ruminate. Like a good many people of this epoch there was some discrepancy between his workaday commercial and his civic honesty. He was entirely willing to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, provided his conscience assured them that they were actually Caesar's. But he failed to see why the U. S. A. should have any legitimate claim on a treasure brought from foreign parts and sunk in these waters before any such nation as the U. S. A. had been conceived.

But Tom was saved the wear and tear by the attitude of Doctor White, who held that if a man could not be a great American he had it in his power to be a good American, and who may have felt in his heart that in remaining the latter he achieved the former. Tom, as chief beneficiary, did not feel himself free to argue the point in ethics. So to further his immediate ambition he took another course.

When the De Corlays had gone and Aunt Martha was clashing the cymbals of a food attack in the pantry, Tom said to Jessica's guardian, "Doctor, as my finances stand to date, wouldn't you consider me to be within the conditions imposed on a candidate for Jessica's hand in marriage?"

"Why, yes, Tom. There can be no doubt at all as to the approximate value of our find."

"Then," said Tom, "if other things are equal, I'm free to marry her?"

"Free as this ocean air, my boy. The other things are equal, I think."

"Thanks, Doctor. Then, all that being conceded and hoped for, we both would like to get married before very long. Say the day after tomorrow. Jessica has got something else she wants to do tomorrow."

Did he fear economic ruin for his people and his nation? Did his heart break because there was no remedy for what he saw? Would he find any similarity between what he saw then and what he sees today?
